Materials

There are several school wide anti-bullying, violence prevention, and positive behavior approaches that have been recognized as promising practices, including:

Positive Behavior Interventions and Supports <https://www.pbis.org>

Olweus School-wide Bullying Prevention Program <http://olweus.sites.clemson.edu>

Additional information on school based violence prevention and positive youth behavior programs is available on the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) website at <https://www.cdc.gov/policy/hst/hi5/violenceprevention/index.html>, on the BluePrints for Healthy Youth Development site at <http://www.blueprintsprograms.com>, and on SAMHSA's National Registry of Evidence Based Programs and Practices (NREPP) at <http://www.nrepp.samhsa.gov/landing.aspx>. Additionally, the website Teaching Tolerance at http://www.tolerance.org/school_climate_resources provides training webinars, "tools, protocols and practical advice for making your school more open and welcoming to all students" and equipping teachers and students to respond to hate, bias, bigotry, and racism.

- Health education lessons and activities should be aligned with any schoolwide approaches in place.

- This document provides selected lessons, resources, and activity ideas that can be implemented and adapted to address these SOLs.

Anti-Bullying Campaign Assignment

Have students create a two week social media campaign with anti-bullying “tweets,” “posts,” “video clips,” or “images” that educate about the impact of violence, bullying, and harrassment on health and safety, and that encourage empathy and bystander intervention. Coordinate with school administration so these can be pushed out through the school social media accounts and read over the daily announcements. Hold a competition for the most re-tweets, shares or likes of the messages to encourage students to actively promote the campaign. Several lideas for activities are available on YouTube, including the video, Hero in the Hallway
